- Criminal Law

This case was heard last Thursday.
mthompson@2gb.com

NSW Police again went home empty handed today in their expensive and elusive quest to secure a scarce evidence based conviction. The charges, relating to the The Officer Loone led NSW raids on Occupy Sydney on February 2nd and 3rd were 2 of Staying Overnight , and a further charge of intimidating police (at the Rocks Police Station). In a relatively short hearing an impeccably mannered and dressed pro bono lawyer, Louie Kristoff dispensed with theatrics preferring minimal but targeted questioning of prosecution witnesses.

On the intimidate police charges police alleged that the defendants statement "I'm going to fuck you up..." amounted to intimidation. The defence contention that in fact he said "I'm going to fuck you up in court was supported by statements from police witnesses that the defendant repeatedly made crude references to taking the officer concerned before the courts for harassment. The judge preferred the defences evidence on the key initial statement because other police witnesses went some way to corroborating the defences assertion, while the complainants version was uncorroborated.

The two staying overnight charges were heard together. In the earlier case police had video evidence of the entire evening on video-well almost-with a period of 1am to 2 am said to be unrecorded. The judge accepted the defence contention that the police did not prove the defendant to be present overnight.

In the latter police presented photo evidence of the defendant asleep on Channel 7's private property -an area not covered by City Council regulations. Although the defences assertion that the property is not council property was uncorroborated (a simple council document would have assisted.) and unable to meet the test of the evidence Act , the judge took the view that on the balance of probability her honor could not be sure that it was not in fact private property.

In summary her honor was particularly troubled by the ambiguity of the regulations as shown on the sign. She said that despite its apparent proximity there was no clear indication of the area the Council regulation sign applied to. The key question was what precisely do the words "Stay Overnight" mean? Her honor was led by the prosecutor to the "common usage comparison" being to staying overnight in an hotel (where guests come and go) and by the defence to the dictionary definition of Stay (as in leave negates stay).Her honor ruled that as there was sufficient ambiguity she must side with the defence. The charges were dismissed.

The defendant would like to acknowledge the preparation and background work was done by our small but committed and overworked legal Group. Full credit to Wennie Rami and team and appreciations to our representative of the day Louie Kristoff whom I have no hesitation in commending for paid cases. He is good. On this note there is a whisper in the wind that Wennie would like to pull back from the legal group and perhaps become involved in the areas of Occupy which drew her to the movement. The legal group would especially welcome support from qualified legal practitioners EMAIL THEM . Oh and shes looking for a job in the legal world and deserves to be inundated with offers...according to the whispers :)

Occupy Mic-Check Party
Saturday 16th June, 7pm - 3am
@ Dustmonster (Dulwich Hill)

A night to blow ourselves away starting with dumpstered food made with love, before dazzling ourselves on the dance floor and the dance walls with your jukebox requests, and sing away into the the deep dark hours together occupying the mics, accompanied by our beloved MCs Vicki and Panda.

Lots of fun ways have been worked out to empty our pockets towards the collective Occupy legals funds :-)

Amongst these we will be raffling off:

Tolga ceremony
A 3-course dumpstered meal
One night at the atmospheric 0 stars Martin Place
A spotlight dance with Rohan
Guest appearance with the Space Cadets on a Sunday night
A 1-hour private yoga class with Vicki

(watch this space for additions and updates on raffle prizes - contact us if you have something to offer! and on the night :-))

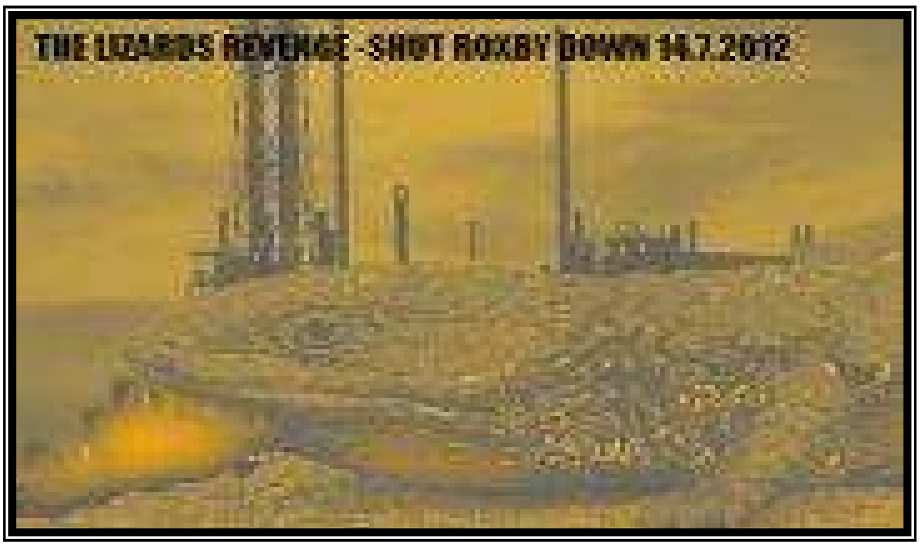
Cheers,
Wenny

Lizard's Revenge - SHUT DOWN ROXBY 14/7/2012

Wed 09 May 2012
By Flowerpower



Roxby Downs

Recently BHP Billiton announced it's proposal to expand the Olympic Dam Uranium Mine in South Australia to become the largest open pit and uranium mine in the world. Traditional owner Uncle Kevin Buzzacott and activist/ musician Izzy Brown are organizing the Lizard's Revenge. On 14th July people are gathering for three days to shut down Roxby Downs which is irreversibly poisoning the land and water, contaminating its workers and spreading its deadly export to the Fukishimas of tomorrow and to war zones in the form of Depleted Uranium. As well as blockading the Lizard Festival will include solar and wind powered cinema, Theatre, Cabaret and Art installations, and over 20 musical acts.

Sleeping underneath the ground there is an old lizard, Kalta the sleepy lizard. The lizard ain't so sleepy anymore. Stand up and boogie down at the Gates of Olympic Dam 14th July 2012

Reports on Free School of 26 May – tents, squatting, and legals

Trying to leave some marks in the free school history for those who couldn´t make it and wonder about the journeys we went on…

´Some of the stuff touched on about tented occupation: about the need to look after the welfare of those who stay overnight and occupy, with freezing -ness taking over, and about overarching problems of housing un-affordability, and the use of the visibility of such occupation to bring the spotlight on this monster of a problem, in a world where getting suitable shelter depends on having the money.´

´On squatting: we had a run through how you do it, how to look for places to squat, how to warm an empty building and make a home of it, how to get basic needs met, and about communicating with neighbours and authorities.´

LEGALS free school: ´We got a better understanding of the legal system in Australia, …….Dale told us this good anecdote about how people that have been through the legal system when arrested could swear that they saw the gavel (the hammer thingy used in American courts) when Australia does not have one, pointing out at the fact that we are flooded with American TV legal ¨knowledge¨, and there is lots to be learned, then we had a run down about the many legal systems in the world through history… I would love to see a map/graph showing all that info. And for future legal related free schools I would like to see some training in legal preparation and collective agreements for affinity groups prior to action and not after, after is the way it usually happens in Sydney.´

Talk with Lance, Ash and Dale about these ☺

----------Were you there? Leave traces of what you have learned in the Free School book, permanently occupying in Martin Place

Lance and others made soup! Some things don´t turn out how we hope, and nobody wished that effort would end up on a bus floor…

Arrests & Police Brutality:
Members of Occupy share their stories

Oakland, United States ♦ 01 June 2012

http://www.citizenside.com/en/photos/politics/2012-06-01/61454/arrests-police-brutality-members-of-occupy-share-their-stories.html

As the worldwide offshoots of Occupy Wall Street gain momentum, Citizenside editorial intern Tabitha Waggoner took some time to find those Occupiers who have had run-ins with the police, what the reasons for arrest were, and if their arrest(s) changed their outlook on the Occupy movement at all.

Some say the Occupy Wall Street's world movement lacks a single message. Others brush off the Occupiers as a bunch of hippies, anarchists, druggies or lazy people who are up to no good and deserve to be arrested. But another part of the world sees Occupy as a revolution, a mass of every day, middle class workers who have had enough of government and banks "controlling" their lives. Who are the Occupiers, really?

One is Chris Burkhardt, a 28-year-old computer programmer, living in the suburbs of Denver, Colorado. He makes his living by developing mobile apps for Apple's iOS platform. Burkhardt admits that other than his one arrest, he's only been superficially involved with Occupy Denver. "I've never attended a General Assembly, for example," he says.

Down under, the Occupy movement has gained attention as well, especially with the leadership of Vicki Smart, a yoga instructor and part of Occupy Sydney since the beginning of the Australian Occupy movement. She's been arrested during Occupy Sydney events not just once, but three times. Once Smart was arrested alone for "trespass" at a sit-in protesting the big bank Westpac.

The second time she was arrested with five others for "public mischief" relating to a demonstration in solidarity with Greeks and against austerity measures. The third time she was arrested alone for "breaching bail conditions" resulting from the Greek action arrest. Her involvement with Occupy has also opened interests in other areas — she currently works with the indigenous social justice association in Australia. They campaign against police brutality and justice for the aboriginal community.

On the left coast of the USA lives The Red Son, 27, who does not want his real name used. He's extremely involved with Occupy San Francisco, Occupy Oakland, and Occupy the Farm. He joined the Occupy movement in the fall of 2011 and was arrested during the January 28 Occupy Oakland action along with at least 400 others. The #J28, as it's called on Twitter, brought a lot of attention to how police were treating protestors in Oakland. But with increasing austerity against the protestors, non-activists question why people keep joining Occupy.

"I joined out of curiosity—to see if like-minded people who demand change could foster this," Smart explained. "I was drawn in by the passion and desire to make our world better and our voice heard."

Likewise, the Red Son felt a kinship with the others of the self-proclaimed 99 percent.

"I saw a vibrant, broadbased popular uprising in the United States, unlike anything I had ever seen," he said. In fact, it was "exactly the type of revolutionary conditions I had been waiting for."

But Burkhardt was more passive, following the movement from afar via Facebook and live video streams. Like most Americans, he agreed and disagreed with facets of Occupy.

However, it was until he heard rumors that Occupy Denver was going to be evicted from their camp that he felt moved enough to be involved. Burkhardt believed that Occupy Denver had a right to protest — and for as long as they wanted. "If the state did forcefully evict the camp, I wanted to be there to oppose those actions in person," he said.

That night, Burkhardt packed camping gear and spent the night with those who had been living there. And in the end, he was arrested. Burkhardt thought the eviction was "violent" and intolerable.

"I was awakened at 3 am by police ordering us out of the park," Burkhardt remembered. Then, riot-gear clad state troopers entered the park and began dismantling tents, he said. "I picked a grassy spot at the edge of the park and sat. I kept that small area clean, was not obstructing anybody else's use of the park, damaged no property, and injured no persons," he said.

"I was not seeking to be arrested in the sense that if I was allowed to remain seated there I would have happily done so until going for breakfast. But I was not going to become complicit with the state in helping to annihilate that space, so I refused the trooper's request to leave and was instead peacefully arrested."

And the government didn't stop there. After Burkhardt's arrest, an "urban camping ban" was drafted and implemented by the city council. "As a result, beginning May 30 it will be illegal to be homeless in Denver," Burkhardt says.

"It is exactly that criminalization of homelessness, denying health and safety to those who have nowhere but a public place to live in the name of 'health and safety,' that I was protesting by sitting in the park with Occupy Denver."

Getting arrested is not something most people are proud of or like to talk about, but for Occupiers, each case is different.

The Red Son says his family was unsurprised when he was arrested since it was only a continuation of political organizing that he was already involved in. On the other hand, Smart's family overseas didn't know about her arrest, and "friends were inquisitive then supportive from a distance."

But Burkhardt's friends and family came to his arraignment hearing and helped him during his arrest. His family also replaced his Kindle and hiking gear that was "trashed" by the Colorado State Patrol. "Many friends and family members took an entire day off of work to support me at my jury trial," Burkhardt said. "This whole thing would have been much more discouraging without them."

Maybe it's a sense of duty that causes the Occupiers to be arrested. Sometimes it seems that they are purposely arrested, or at least expect to be arrested. In other instances, such as at the Chicago NATO summit protest, America's watched as protestors fight or run from the police who are beating them with batons.

The Red Son predicted to himself that he'd be arrested, and he was right. He's been arrested at two pre-occupy political actions and on #J28, plus two other times.

"I always know it's a potential risk and knew I would likely face arrest in Oakland."

It's not a duty, but if he doesn't go to an occupy action simply because he's afraid of being arrested, the police have already won, the Red Son said.

"I was arrested in a kettle in front of a YMCA, I tried to find a way out but OPD had us surrounded."

As for Smart, "I never thought I'd be arrested," she said. Then she heard that Occupiers were being policed heavily, so she thought "maybe" it would happen. But Smart admits she wasn't willing to be arrested at the start.

"I didn't want to be arrested [the first time] but chose to highlight the action," Smart said. She knew there was a lot of media watching. "I guess I felt it was my duty as the action organizer."

But, with the Greek action incident, she never wanted to be arrested at all. "The arrests stemmed from a huge police overreaction thinking art items we left outside the Greek consulate were bombs!"

That time, Smart was under arrest for 12.5 hours.

The third time she was taken into the police's custody because she had forgotten to report to police. The next day she was put in front of the bail court.

But Burkhardt says he doesn't think that it's his duty as an Occupier to be arrested. "But as a resident, a citizen, I feel an obligation to offer resistance to unjust laws," he says.

But resistance doesn't always come without fear of the uncertainty. Some protestors are fearless, others are not — after all, they're regular people.

Smart says she was afraid more than once during her life as an Occupier. "At our reoccupation rally in November we were surrounded by the public order riot squad who put on gloves, rattled pepper spray and were overheard saying 'it will be the bitches who scream first,' " she remembered.

When she was arrested a third time, Smart said she suffered a panic attack in custody but was ignored.

"I couldn't breathe and was genuinely frightened," she said.

The Red Son found himself afraid similarly, but only when OPD had batons or other 'less-than-lethal' weapons deployed, he said. "But in general, during street actions, I am aware of my surroundings, including potential threats," he said. "Being aware and in control takes a lot of the fear out of the situation."

But Burkhardt says he feels a debilitating discouragement more than fear. "Living a peaceful and principled life, even in the most free republics in the world, can very easily have you spending months or years in jail cells or prisons."

And it's even worse when the people they love don't seem to understand or completely agree with them.

"It has also been frustrating watching my friends and family agree that while my particular arrest was probably unjust, the State and police are relatively good in general," Burkhardt said.

Many say arrests can bring more attention to the cause for good or for ill. Do arrests make a difference for Occupy?

"I think the arrests have helped quantify police overreaction; we have had around 90 arrests in Sydney and the police have spent nearly $1,000,000," Smart said. "Their budgets have been called up and to account. The Greek action arrests opened the floodgates for Aussie media to begin to report on austerity."

The Red Son also believes his arrest helped the Occupy movement. He was detained in a jail with 130 other Occupiers.

"We all connected and shared the experience, spending hours talking while we were detained," he said. The news of four hundred-plus people arrested was international and it brought a lot of positive solidarity to Occupy Oakland. Plus the world saw the savage nature of OPD and how repressive they really were."

But Burkhardt disagrees. "I don't think my arrest has had any significant effect on the greater Occupy movement," he said.

But do these three feel so strongly about Occupy that would they do it again?

"For the right cause I would absolutely do it again; I am not scared of utilizing my right to peacefully protest," Smart said.

"I will avoid arrests in most situations," the Red Son said. "But I am not afraid to be arrested during a street action; as a comrade once said, 'there is way more to be excited about than to be afraid of.'"

Burkhardt admits he would go through it all over again — although "less enthusiastically now that I've had a first-hand taste of how the state, the police and the courts, will not hesitate to cast aside innocent lives in defending its own interests."

But how do the police respond to Occupy? "With brutal violence," the Red Son answered simply, while Smart called the police in Sydney forceful, arrogant and disdainful.

"Some ask questions, but we are mainly policed by The Rocks local area command who effectively manage drunk and disorderly on weekends," she says. "They have very little experience with protests. Our commissioner of police, Andrew Scipione is clearly very eager to be rid of us."

Burkhardt agrees about the police situation. "I'm not sure the psychology of the phenomenon, but police everywhere appear to have a deep-seated and irrational fear of tents."

Coalition Of The Willing

by coalitionfilm 1 year ago

'Coalition of the Willing' is a collaborative animated film and web-based event about an online war against global warming in a 'post Copenhagen' world.

‘Coalition of the Willing’ has been Directed and produced by Knife Party, written by Tim Rayner and crafted by a network of 24 artists from around the world using varied and eclectic film making techniques. Collaborators include some of the world’s top moving image talent, such as Decoy, World Leaders and Parasol Island.

The film offers a response to the major problem of our time: how to galvanize and enlist the global publics in the fight against global warming. This optimistic and principled film explores how we could use new Internet technologies to leverage the powers of activists, experts, and ordinary citizens in collaborative ventures to combat climate change. Through analyses of swarm activity and social revolution, 'Coalition of the Willing' makes a compelling case for the new online activism and explains how to hand the fight against global warming to the people.

Lizard's Revenge Call to Action

Hosted by the DLF - Desert Liberation Front in response to the governments decision to expand Olympic Dam mine.

... Sleeping underneath the ground there is an old lizard, Kalta the sleepy lizard. The lizard ain't so sleepy anymore.

BHP is mining right into that Lizards body. The government has just approved an expansion of the Olympic Dam uranium mine, making it the biggest uranium mine in the world.

Kalta is angry and wants revenge. Arabana elder Kevin Buzzacott is calling the people of the world to help the lizard shut down the mine. He is calling for people to come and heal the land in the name of peace and justice for the next 10,000 generations to come.

The land is being irreversibly poisoned in and around Roxby Downs by the tailings dam causing dust and ground water contamination, and contamination of its workers.

The uranium is taken all over the world and used to kill the land and all its creatures. It's destroying lives not only in Fukashima, with the reactor meltdown, but in the depleted uranium shells that children play with in the streets of Iraq and Kosovo.

With the governments numerous attempts to put a nuclear waste dump at Muckaty in the Northern Territory there is a danger that radioactive waste will be brought back, opening Australia up to accepting nuclear waste from all over the world. Lets stop the deadly cycle where it starts.

The land the lizard and the creatures of this earth are summoning everybody who gives a shit to the gates of Roxby Downs on the 14th of July 2012 for The Lizards Revenge - This is an open invitation to all people and a special call out to artists, musicians and activist community groups and media to get involved in the creation of this autonomous zone for the peace and healing of this land.

Party in a Dangerous Planet with Theatre, Cabaret and Art installations. Over 20 musical acts. Solar Powered sound system extravaganza and wind powered cinema. More to be announced..

This coming Saturday 9th June at 1pm,

Join us for yet another exciting and engaging Occupy Sydney Free School

June 4th, 2012 · Liam from http://www.occupysydney.org.au/

1.00pm – Freedom…

Let your mind ponder notions of 'freedom' with Alex and Pathi. Could you be free in gaol? Or might you be a prisoner in everyday life? Is it necessary to look in our minds to find freedom? Alex and Pathi will pose these questions, and more, to your mind and your soul.

2.00pm – Snacks 'n' chat…

Hang out and meet your fellow Free Schoolers with snacks and a chat.

3.00pm – Lizard's Revenge…

Dan introduces and invites us to Lizard's Revenge. The Federal Government has approved an expansion of the Olympic Dam uranium mine, to make it the biggest uranium mine in the world. Lizard's Revenge opens an invitation to all people and a special call out to artists, musicians and activist community groups and media to get involved in the creation of this autonomous zone for the peace and healing of this land. Stand up and boogie down at the Gates of Olympic Dam 14th July 2012.

4.15pm – Dreaming…

Pathi will take us on a journey inside the coral reefs of his unconscious mind as he discusses the practice of dreaming. Pathi will illuminate the links between dreaming, empowerment and being 'present' in our daily lives.

When: 1.00pm Saturday 9th June.

Where: 56a Martin Place (near Macquarie Street)

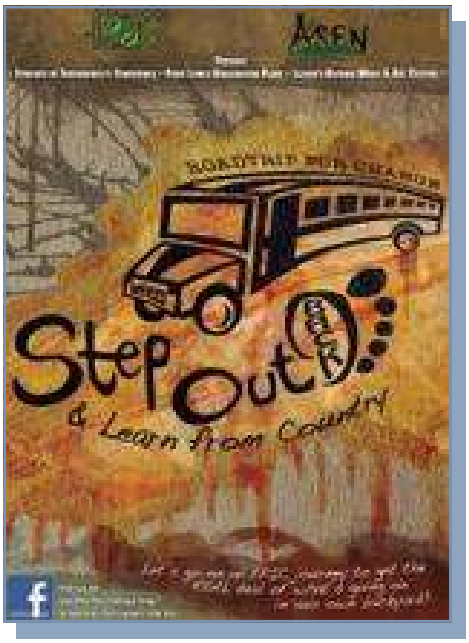
Looking forward to seeing you at another fabulous Free School.

Road Trip for Change - Step Out(back) and Learn from Country

Date and Time: Tue, 03/07/2012 - 9:00am - Fri, 20/07/2012 - 9:00pm

Location: Bendigo Students of Sustainability Conference and Roxby Downs for the Lizards Revenge Music/Art Festival

Website: www.roadtripforchange.org



If you're keen for something different these winter holidays then come on an inspirational journey with us like-minded crew! We're heading out-back to learn about this amazing place we live in and sharpen our skills to stand up for country.

In July the South Australian Student Environment Network will be running a series of epic road trips that will take you on a journey of learning from Adelaide to Australia's biggest grass roots Environment Conference: Students of Sustainability (SoS), then via the great SA outback to Roxby Downs for the Lizards Revenge Music/Art festival.

On the way to Roxby Downs we will visit Pt Lowly on the Eyre Peninsula, the breeding place for the Australian Giant Cuttlefish and the site for the proposed BHP desalination plant. We will then head north via the Flinders Ranges to Arabunna Country where we have been invited by elder Uncle Kevin Buzzacott to see for ourselves site of the Olympic Dam mining expansion and to attend the Lizard's Revenge Festival.

18 days is a long time, so we have broken the trip into parts for those of you who can't come for the whole thing.....so you have a choice to attend:

- The entire trip: 3rd to 20th July

OR

- SoS conference: Adelaide to Bendigo and back to Adelaide 3rd to 9th July.
event: https://www.facebook.com/events/187397901361634/

OR

- Bendigo to Lizards Revenge via Outback and back to Adelaide 8th to 20th July (ideal for Eastern states participants)

OR

- Adelaide to Lizards Revenge via Outback and back to Adelaide 10th to 20th July.
event: https://www.facebook.com/events/224524544273924/

The cost of the trip will depend on how many people come, the transport we will need and which part you come for. Considering that the whole trip is 17 days, the cost is estimated to be at about $400-$500 per person, including food, accommodation (camping) and SoS fee. BUT we will likely get grants and subsidies from the Universities so the cost to you will be much less than that :) .....Plus... We'll be doing a bunch of fundraising leading up to the Road Trip to make it more affordable for everyone.
(Holla if you can help us out with fundraising!)

If you click "attending" it is also important that you secure your place on the trip by paying a $50 deposit and also officially register here: https://docs.google.com/spreadsheet/viewform?formkey=dDlONFdwQWxESEpwX0t1NElVS1VHcWc6MQ so that we can accurately know how much transport we will need

Any questions chuck us an email at: sasen@asen.org.au
